The film deals with schizophrenia in a different angle. Sankaran, a railway gang man is sacked for drinking while on duty. He couldn't help drinking as he couldn't stand the noise of the trains. Later, diagnosed with schizophrenia, he gets admitted in a mental hospital. No one visited him during his long stay in the hospital. He continuously wrote to his son Ramu for 15 years without getting any reply. Ramu, now a well placed engineer, starts hearing trains, exactly as Sankaran used to experience after receiving the last letter from his father.
