Empty Nest is a comedic look at the problems inherent in married life and the difficulties associated with keeping a long-term relationship new and exciting. When their last child leaves home, a middle-aged couple suddenly finds itself alone for the first time in years. The house is empty, the children scattered all over the world. For Leonardo and Martha, there are no more excuses for not addressing all those little grievances and annoyances that have piled up over the years. They both begin to question their happiness. While the husband tackles the empty-nest syndrome with vivid fantasies, his wife engages in a whirlwind of activities and enjoys her new-found freedom with endless dinners with friends.
