Hannah Maynard, prosecutor at the International Criminal Tribunal in Hague, is leading a trial against a former commander of the Yugoslavian National Army who is accused of the deportation and later killing of dozens of Bosnian-Muslim civilians. When a key witness commits suicide, it looks like the case will be lost. However Hannah refuses to give in and travels to Sarajevo and meets his sister Mira, who she senses has much more to say than she is willing to admit. Despite threats to her life, Mira reluctantly agrees to testify at The Hague. Against all odds, she and Hannah make it to the court, only to discover that there are traitors among their own ranks.
